

Sinclair Broadcasting is misusing the public trust by airing a blatantly one-sided political program under the guise of "documentary" in the last few days of the campaign in an effort to influence the presidential election.

The American public owns the broadcast spectrum that Sinclair uses under license from the FCC. Both the FCC and Sinclair have a responsibility to the public to use the airwaves to serve the public interest. The personal opinion of Sinclair's owners, and the private interest of its shareholders, should not take precedence over the public interest.